Black History Month is an opportunity to recognize the history, achievements and enduring contributions of Black Canadians while celebrating the leaders, entrepreneurs, artists and changemakers shaping the country today. As a new generation builds on the work of those who came before, conversations around economic opportunity, representation, wellbeing and community leadership continue to evolve. This special feature will explore the people, ideas and initiatives advancing Black excellence and creating new opportunities across Canada.

Proposed topic highlights:

Leadership across generations — Celebrating established and emerging Black leaders making an impact in business, public life and communities.

Entrepreneurship and economic opportunity — How access to capital, mentorship and networks is helping Black-owned businesses start, scale and succeed.

Culture and creative influence — Highlighting Black contributions to arts, media, fashion, food and Canada's broader cultural landscape.

Health and wellbeing — The Black-led initiatives, research and community programs improving access to culturally responsive care and support.

Youth and future leaders — How education, mentorship and career pathways are helping young Black Canadians pursue new opportunities.

Recognition, justice and development — How Canada is advancing the goals of the Second International Decade for People of African Descent.
